RABBI'S MESSAGE

Aleinu as Source of Courage

On the High Holy Days, we actually bow down on the ground during the Mussaf repetition of the special Amidah prayer. We bow down as we say the “Great Aleinu.” The Aleinu with which we close every service is actually taken from this special High Holy Day Mussaf prayer. However, we bow all the way down to the ground on these days because on them we are acknowledging God as King over all the world and over our lives. On the first day of Sukkot, we will read a Haftarah taken from Zechariah 14, where the concluding phrase of the Aleinu appears: ביום ההוא יהיה השם אחד ושמו אחד, “on that day, the Lord will be One, and his name One.”

This phrase is rather cryptic. What does it mean in a monotheistic tradition to say that God will be One in the distant future? Isn't God already one? We declare God's one-ness twice daily when we say the Shema. Perhaps we can find some help in the parallel phrase, “his name will be One” Perhaps it simply means that people will find agreement on the age old questions of how to understand God. Something like this is supported by the simple meaning of the chapter: the many peoples of the world come to worship God in Jerusalem, and acknowledge the God of Israel is the source of all blessing or cursing.

I'd like to repeat something I heard this year from Christina Randall James. When we discussed it, she suggested that it means that God will no longer stand on the side of judgment, but only on the side of mercy and blessing. God will finally appear to us only as a source of blessing because when God's rule is established on earth, there will be no need for punishment or harsh judgment. Given that humans will finally live under a form of rule that reflects God's will, we will no longer need to experience God's judgment oriented actions. The fact that this insight comes from someone who works in the district attorney's office in the Bronx, sharpens its realism.

So what can we do with the insight that God will one day rule all the world, bringing only blessing? My suggestion is that this can change our basic perception toward taking action in the world. We are not voyagers without a map. We are not just experimenting with things and seeing what sticks. We have been given the destination in advance: universal worship of our God. However, the route that we humans will take is left up to us. But whatever route we take, at some point, God will bring human history to a culmination that leads to worship of the One God. This should be a source of profound courage to us. Though it may not look like it, at any given moment that we evaluate the state of the world, the prophet Zechariah and the Aleinu prayer assure us that world history will eventually culminate in God's own rule of all peoples. That's an extraordinary vision, and one that can give us courage.

In his book, A Small Treatise on the Great Virtues (which I highly recommend), Andre Comte-Sponville points out however that courage is not an unqualified good because it can be used for good or for ill. He writes, “The most suspect thing about courage is its indiscrimination: it can serve good or evil ends without changing their nature. Courageous wickedness is still wickedness. Courageous fanaticism is still fanaticism.” So courage needs to be guided by wisdom and the other virtues lest it lead us toward merely doing greater harm. This lack of balance with other virtues is what we witnessed with the messianism of the Zealots and Sicarri before the destruction of the Second Temple, and the messianism of the Frankists and Sabbateans in early Modern times. Their courage was not a force for good, but only for further distorting a warped vision of reality. How can we make sure that courage is well used?

Throughout our lives, and especially whenever we are exercising leadership, we have to make sure that we are aligning our action with the will of God, who holds the master plan for human history. Does our vision forward violate Torah? Then it's probably not a good idea. Does our vision violate humanistic commitments, i.e. the high value placed upon the human being, which fed from its source - the idea of Tzelem Elohim in the Hebrew Bible, grew throughout history, and especially strongly after the Renaissance to into the full-fledged humanism of which our culture is now heir? If so, then it is probably not a good idea. Yet, merely periodic re-alignments won't be enough, because it is the cumulative weight of our day to day attitudes, perceptions and decisions that will make the greatest difference. Somehow we have to be able to re-align our will with that of God on an ongoing daily basis.

That is where prayer enters presents a practical solution to an everyday problem. My father taught me that prayer is an aligning our will with God's will. You can also see this in the structure of the Amidah, the essential prayer, repeated three times daily by traditional Jews. In the Amidah, we encounter a sequential list of what God wants for the world. The first three blessings ground us in our relationship with God, the next thirteen tell a story that begins with personal learning, and proceeds to repentance – turning back to God - and then branches out into communal life as we connect ourselves to other righteous people. And as those who live their lives toward the purposes of God - as they make common cause, then the appointed one, Meshiakh becomes possible. Then we move toward God's redemption, and presence in Jerusalem, within which all nations find justice and joy. It is an overwhelming sweep, almost too much to absorb. And partly as a result, we miss its meaning. It isn't a laundry list of desiderata, but a carefully constructed series of blessings that tells the whole arc of individual and communal Jewish history.

Each time we recite it, I want to invite you to make time to study a different part of the Amidah; and consider the sequence and content of these Berakhot. And then let's can ask ourselves, how does my life line up with God's purposes?

When we consistently consider our lives in light of divine purposes, courage is the result. When we trust that God, rather than us, has control of history, we can avoid temptations toward over confidence that have so distorted both fundamentalist forms of religion and secular ideologies alike. If I don't have to resolve the problem all on my own, then I am able to have patience. I am not accountable for the entire outcome, but instead for my part of the process toward redemption. The question is have I done my part? Am I taking time to routinely re-align myself with God's purposes in prayer? One day, God will be One, and his name One. The only question is what part am I going to play in that process?

PRESIDENT'S REPORT

Many thanks again to Sunny Buchman for making all the calls from far away New Jersey to arrange everyone's parts for High Holiday Services. It was great to see her back in Glens Falls for Rosh Hashanah. Thanks also to Mike Gersten for keeping High Holiday services on track again as he does every year.

In case you missed my summary at Rosh Hashanah services regarding the recent survey conducted by Lucrecia Kleinfeld, here it is.

Briefly, although not a scientific survey, the responses pointed to several common themes. Many people suggested more activities to engage congregants of varying ages.

Over the last year, we did have many activities, including a Succah decorating event, Chanukah party, Shabbat dinners, Passover Seder, Jewish Journey Shabbat, Meditation Shabbat, Purim party, two summer barbecues, Kabbalat Shabbat picnic, birthday celebrations, going away party, an anniversary celebration, a wedding engagement celebration, a ping pong tournament, an event honoring Matt Rozell, movie nights, cooking classes and classes in Hebrew and Judaic studies and a garage sale, to name a few.

In the coming year, we plan to beef up our Saturday night activities with Havdalah followed by movies and discussion on a regular basis.

Also, Lorraine Hochman has taken the initiative to organize a special program called "Trust and Connection" led by Cate Labare on December 2 after Shabbat morning kiddish. Fliers about this are available in the back. Please take one.

We are also hoping to have a Shabbat retreat next Spring, spearheaded by Bethany Slater. Please contact Bethany to find out how you can help with planning and organization for this activity. We anticipate more of these special events as the year progresses.

We just had our first activity with a visiting speaker for kiddish after Shabbat Shuvah morning services. Mark James PhD, a scholar of religion, discussed the subject "Scripture as Wisdom." The presentation centered on two apparently contradictory verses from Proverbs and generated much interesting discussion.

We plan to have both beginner and intermediate Hebrew classes this fall. Please contact me if you are interested and we will figure out what level class will work best for you.

Please also spend some time in our synagogue basement, which has been painted and reorganized to create a more relaxed environment for socialization. Please feel free to hang out there after services today or if you need a break during services.

Although our services are generally well received, many people commented that they would like to see shorter services with more English. We plan to respond to this particularly on Friday nights with more regular Jewish Journey or "learning services" and Shabbat evening dinners with Friday night kiddish. The goal is to make such services approachable and understandable, to concentrate more on interaction and discussion.

We are also interested in having Friday night services in members' homes to create a more intimate environment for worship and discussion. If you would be willing to volunteer your home for such a service, please let us know. We will supply the noshes.

Our next activity will be Succah building at 8 a.m. Sunday October 1 followed by decoration of the Succah at 9:30 a.m. In addition to our Succoth, Shemini Atzeret and Simchat Torah services, don't forget to come to Malachi LaRock's bar-mitzvah October 14. Religious school will start Sunday October 22 at 9:30 a.m. Call me for details and questions.

Please continue to give us your feedback so we can continue to make Shaaray Tefila your Jewish home.
