RABBINIC INTERN
DAVID MAGAZINE
MALMUD

I am thrilled to introduce myself to this amazing community. I am eager to join you all at Shaaray Tefila this month and share some words of Torah with each other. I am a Marylander, born and raised in the DC suburbs. I grew up at a beautiful and passionate Reconstructionist shul. While I have since drifted away from the Reconstructionist movement, I am eager to participate in and lead similarly spirited community and prayer spaces.

I am writing this prior to Shabbat Eikev in the final book of Devarim. While reading through this rich parshah over my morning coffee, I stumbled on a verse that really spoke to me:

Know with your heart that just as a man disciplines his son, Hashem your G-d disciplines you.

- - וידעת עם לבבך כי כאשר יסר איש את בנו יהוה אלהיו מוסרה: -
Devarim 8:5

This language of the divine father as a disciplinarian can seem harsh. Growing up Reconstructionist, I actively struggled with the imagery of the divine father, which shows up throughout our liturgy, but particularly during the High Holidays (see, for instance Avinu Malkenu). Even after no longer identifying as Reconstructionist, I wrestled with this notion, particularly after hearing from folks who had less than ideal relationships with their fathers. With the High Holidays on the horizon, however, this recurring theme from this week's parshah jumped out at me.

A little over a year ago, my perspective shifted on the divine father metaphor. My wife, Rebecca, gave birth to twins last summer and I started to understand the notion of G-d as father. Having sons of my own, I finally understood the father/son relationship from the other perspective. As a father, I feel a mix of deep love, pride, compassion, and joy for my boys, Ben and Ari.

This does not erase the fact that many fathers act harshly towards their children.

יִסָּר in this form means discipline, but in a different form, מוֹסֵר, of the same root, יָסַר, means to teach wisdom. Musar literature is a whole genre of early modern ethics literature, not at all about harsh discipline. Personally, I prefer this reading of the verse. Either way, the different forms of the same word reflect the variety in fathers and parenting styles. This root, יָסַר, and the verse in general also demonstrate the multiple relationships an individual can have with their father and simultaneously the multiple relationships an individual has with the divine. Sometimes, our relationship may feel warm and loving, and other times it may feel cold and distant. No matter how we interpret it, the metaphor of the divine father is a fixture of High Holidays of this penitential season.

Over the following weeks leading up to the High Holidays, I encourage us all to explore this and other features of the High Holiday liturgy. Try it on for size. Maybe it works for you, maybe it doesn't. I invite you to choose any prayer, a piyyut, or some of the Torah portions. There are some challenging themes that I hope we can all wrestle with together.

Student Rabbi David

PRESIDENT MARK HOFFMAN

Cher and I had a wonderful time in N.Y.C. this summer, studying Hebrew and Talmud. We were impressed with how livable and enjoyable the city is. We are thankful to all of you who continued making Shaaray Tefila "the place to be" this summer, especially on Saturday mornings.

Please mark your calendars for the weekend of September 20th, when we will welcome our new rabbinic intern, David Malamud, a fourth year student at Hebrew College. We are anticipating a special oneg or dinner that Friday night. Watch for details.

We do very much need your Yom Kippur pledges and membership payments this year, as we anticipate significant building repair expenses, in addition to our usual operating expenses. We are setting a goal for Yom Kippur appeal of $26,000 this year, which is a significant amount, but certainly achievable. You will have the opportunity again this year to make your pledge before the holiday so we are not intruding excessively into the spirit of the Yom Kippur service. We decided again this year not to increase membership dues so as to minimize financial barriers to full synagogue participation. Our dues continue to be among the lowest in the country.

Please consider volunteering for a synagogue committee. It is very important that we have leadership from a broad spectrum of the Shaaray Tefila community. Our current leadership has many years of institutional knowledge that will be helpful for others to acquire before the inevitable transitions take place. We are particularly in need of a building chairperson at this time.

Speaking of leadership, thank you to Bonnie Yanklowitz for her many years of tireless dedication as Sisterhood president. Bonnie has been instrumental in making the Sisterhood an integral part of synagogue life, whether through onegs and kiddishes, special events, or programs like this year's mishoach manot boxes. Special thanks also to Ellen Katz for agreeing to be our new Sisterhood president and to Francine Torra, our new Sisterhood vice-president. We know that, under your leadership, Sisterhood will continue to shine its light on our wonderful congregation.

Please check the bulletin, announcements and emails for dates and times for future Sisterhood or Synagogue programs/events or meetings.

Reminder: It's that time of year again! Dues have not been raised in many years and need to be double CHAI-$36 this year. Thank you for your additional donations in the past. Sisterhood has been a vital part of CST providing important benefits for the synagogue and community. Your membership and participation are needed and much appreciated.

Thank you for your continued membership, donations, support and suggestions to your Sisterhood.

I was honored to be President and Co-P since 1999 and now it's time to enjoy and work with the new President, Ellen Katz. Welcome Ellen! (BY)

Early Happy New Year (Shanah Tova) to you, your family and friends. Healthy, peaceful, safe times to all.

MEET RABBINIC INTERN DAVID

David Magazine Malamud is a proud Shannah Dalet student at Hebrew College. Originally from Gaithersburg, MD (DMV represent!), David moved to the Boston area to pursue a PhD at Boston University in Religion but fell in love with Hebrew College instead. As a recovering academic, David has spent past summers learning Talmud at JTS and Hadar. This past summer, David read Torah at Temple Israel in Nantasket, MA and worked in the Judaica division of Harvard's Widener libraries. In his spare time, David enjoys tending to his backyard garden, cooking complicated and sometimes disastrous dinners, and terrorizing the local turkeys of Cambridge with his trusty companions Lilah (dog) and Rebecca (wife).

CONGREGATION SHAARAY TEFILA & TEMPLE BETH EL JEWISH COMMUNITY COOKOUT

On a beautiful sunny Sunday afternoon, the friends, family, and members of Temple Beth El and Congregation Shaaray Tefila gathered in Crandall Park for food, fun, conversation and comradery. We barbecued, ate, schmoozed, laughed, shared stories and enjoyed each other's company. The children ran around in the playground and cooled off in the sprays of the Crandall Park Splash Pad. Bruce was the Chef, serving up delicious kosher hamburgers and hot dogs and veggie burgers. Side dishes, chips, dips, drinks, fruit and pareve desserts were brought by the participants. The day ended with roasting delicious kosher pareve marshmallows, made from fish gelatin. Who knew?

We were grateful for perfect weather, not too hot or humid. A warm thank you to everyone who attended and brought delicious food, drinks, supplies and good conversation. May we all enjoy many more shared occasions together.

Ellen Katz,
Cookout Chair

OUR GREAT BIG IRISH BAR MITZVAH

Early in July, I had the pleasure, thrill, and honor of attending and participating in my grandson, Elijah's Bar Mitzvah. My son, Adam, his wife, Tara, and Eli moved to Ireland, 40 minutes from Dublin, when Elijah was about to go into first grade. They wanted a two or three-year adventure in an English-speaking country and they're still there eight years later.

There is only one synagogue in Dublin, the Dublin Jewish Progressive Congregation and it seemed that Hebrew School was going to be unlikely there. One of our very own came to the rescue, Rebecca Charhon who for several years provided virtual Hebrew School for Eli. He loved working with her and he loved learning to read Hebrew and learning more about Jewish rituals, prayers, and history. When it got closer, Rebecca began Bar Mitzvah lessons which were taken over by Rabbi Jackie Tabick from London for the last five weeks. Unlike at Shaaray Tefila where we have access to student rabbis, there are no rabbinic seminaries in Ireland. Consequently, this lovely, small synagogue conducts mostly lay services but enlists one of four retired rabbis who come from London for holidays and special events. Along with periodic communication with Rebecca, Rabbi Jackie worked with Eli every day except Saturday, an hour a day for five weeks to prepare him to read the Torah portion and Haftorah, both in Hebrew with trope, and in English.

So, the Bar Mitzvah. It actually began before the eventful day on Friday morning, July 5, with a four-hour walking tour of Dublin, incorporating Jewish sites and led by a synagogue member, a convert to Judaism and a native of Ireland. It ended with a brief visit to a small Jewish museum in the formerly Jewish neighborhood of Portobello where I first met 77-year old Hilary, director of the museum and, as I would learn, director of many things. Above the one room museum was a lovely one-room synagogue, a "shteebl," no longer in use but the torahs and other artifacts were on display. It reminded me of some of the one-room synagogues, storefronts and basement shuls that I knew as a child in the South Bronx.

After this it was a rush back to the AirBnB house I had rented in a beautiful neighborhood of classic homes, Rathgar, where all the homes had the well-known "Dublin doors." Most Jews live in Rathgar and some in nearby Rathmine where the synagogue is located. While estimates vary, there are fewer than 3000 Jews in the entire Republic of Ireland.

At the house, we had a huge buffet dinner, paper plates, self-serve, messy and fun, catered by Chabad. There is a Chabad house in Dublin but rather than take Jews away from this one synagogue, the Chabad rabbi decided to open a glatt kosher grocery store/restaurant with catering. So in Ireland, we had mountains of glatt kosher shnitzl, goulash, hummus, babaganoush, latkes, fried gefilte fish (Fried? Is that the Irish way?) and a dozen other dishes. After that, off to the synagogue two blocks away for a Bar Mitzvah rehearsal orchestrated by none other than Hilary. Eli had practice with the rabbi's "pinching" clues when he had to read more slowly or more loudly. Family and friends did our practice aliyahs, arc opening and closing and dressing the torah. I have four children and never had a Bar/Bat Mitzvah rehearsal. Who knew?

Saturday morning was the Bar Mitzvah service and Eli did beautifully thanks to Rebecca's wonderful instruction and Rabbi Jackie's final weeks of tutoring and yes, Hilary's direction throughout. The sanctuary was vibrant with red, white and blue yarmulkes/kippot (Eli's nod to the US) that I had crocheted. They were on the heads of Jews, Irish Catholics and on the head of Adam's close friend since kindergarten, a Muslim. I also loved that Rabbi Jackie insisted on an English recitation as well as a Hebrew one and further, that Eli explained what it meant to him. Eli is very proud of his Judaism, surprising especially since he's the only Jewish child in his school and neighborhood.

Following the service, there were more mountains of food for the kiddush catered again by Chabad and supervised by Hilary. Then a celebration in the evening at a club in a nearby hotel. Most of the guests were Irish, most not Jewish but all celebrated, attempted the Hora dance, sang to karaoke, were joyous, drank heartily and had a good time. Interesting too was that most of the Irish guests gave Eli money gifts in multiples of eighteen. How did they know about Chai? Well, the internet of course but so nice that they cared to research it.

However, there was an unhappy event earlier in the day when we were leaving the shul. Several of us gathered to take pictures in the lovely courtyard in front of the building. The president came out and told us to go back inside for pictures as it was too dangerous for groups of Jews to be congregating publicly. The entire property is enclosed by a tall, iron gate with a full-time security guard who monitors its opening and closing and questions all before they can enter. That was very sad. The Chabad restaurant had also lost many of their non-Jewish customers since October 7.

Since so many people had flown in from everywhere, there was a brunch on Sunday morning at the Chabad restaurant. I chose not to go but went to the Jewish Museum instead, the only day it was open to the public except by appointment—security there also and several synagogue members in attendance. It was very interesting, although heartbreaking as it brought into focus how the number of Jews in Dublin had diminished over the years. I spent hours with Hilary, yes, the director, hearing her descriptions of artifacts and details of her own four-generation family history in Dublin. The day ended with a rock concert (Do they still call it that?) with some contemporary group that we oldies didn't know.

The festivities went on for three days, at all times understated, not ostentatious and most importantly, joyous and celebratory. I was so proud of my grandson and proud of my son and daughter-in-law for everything over the years that went into this beautiful event happening and of course, for giving me the most amazing grandson. I wish my parents, Holocaust survivors had known him, been present and shared in the “naches” (joy). Eli was incredible, sincere and proud of his faith and heritage. My son was his exuberant, joyous self but more so, was my daughter in-law. I am grateful to Rebecca and Rabbi Jackie. I bonded with Hilary and hope to maintain a relationship with her and to continue to hear news of the Dublin Jewish Progressive Congregation through their newsletter which, by the way, Hilary also writes.
